From house-made sauces, traditional sesame seed buns, and American cheese to vegan renditions and even burgers topped with peanut butter – the third annual Long Beach Burger Week returns with something for everyone to enjoy.

The eight-day event, from July 23 to 30, pays homage to America’s culinary classic – the hamburger.

It also is an opportunity for Long Beach residents and visitors to support local restaurants during a critical time while, also trying new places or visiting personal favorites, according to event organizer Long Beach Food & Beverage, a nonprofit dedicated to providing a platform for the city’s restaurant community.

“We may be past the pandemic stage of COVID, but restaurants are still struggling and the third annual city-wide Long Beach Burger Week will help increase guest counts and sales,” Terri Henry, executive director of Long Beach Food & Beverage, said in a press release. “And hey, it’s summertime and who doesn’t love a good burger?”

Featured eateries will offer a Long Beach Burger Week menu with dine-in, to go and delivery options available depending on the restaurant.

A few of the over-the-top burger offers include Burger Hand Pies, Pupusa Burgers, Cajun Lobster-topped, IPA Cheese-topped, Cheeseburger Pizza, Pastrami-topped, Chile Verde Burger, and more unique options.

During Long Beach Burger Week, businesses will also offer discounted specials, ranging from $5 to $25.

Some participating restaurants include Polly’s Pies, Long Beach Tap House, Eat
