Condiments aren't solely a summertime thing, but it would be difficult to visualize a delicious food experience in the warmer months without a bottle of classic ketchup or dish of chili sauce standing by to zhuzh things up.

But how to send off the condiment-heavy stretch in savory style? Spending some of the final days of summer feasting on burgers, those condiment-tastic icons, all while saving a few bucks sounds like a grand and filling plan.

Some of Long Beach's best-known burgeries get us on the summer-wind-down front, and to honor the season's big and burger-y goodbye? There is Long Beach Burger Week, which will sizzle, melt, and bun it up, with meaty and non-meaty moxie, from Sept. 13 through 20 in 2026.

This is the sixth go-around for the gourmand-beckoning bash, which has well over a dozen participants on board and a few different price points.

The costs start at $5, with $10, $15, and $20 also in the mix; if you want to go with a combo, you might encounter a multi-part meal for $25, if the burger-making place you're visiting has gone that route.

Perusing the participants before you go, to see what will be offered during the patty-perfect week? You can, at the event site: Jimmy E's Bar and Grill, Altar Society Brewing, The Kroft, and Parkers' Lighthouse are all in the stack-'em-high swing.

Burger Hand Pies will be one tempting goodie, and Pupusa Burgers, too; there may be burgers for your best pal (your pup) depending on where you head. Past Long Beach Burger Weeks have made a poochly point of involving dogs in the dine-out fun.
